A pretty typical blend of 78% Shiraz (aged in older oak) and 22% Grenache (matured only in stainless steel), the 2019 Wallace Shiraz-Grenache comes across as a bit tarry on first opening, followed by plummy, blackberry fruit, with more savory tones of black olive and bright blueberries on the medium to full-bodied palate. Not overly rich or extracted, this is a fine, silky offering that can be consumed over the next half-dozen years or so.

2019 Wallace, 92 Points

I can't begin to tell you how many times this modestly priced over achiever has come up in big tastings I conduct each year. It's a really consistent value for money red from the Barossa that always seems to deliver a little more than the price. This is stacked with bright red fruits that emerge from the Grenache component, while it is underpinned by deeper savoury plum flavours of the shiraz. A rich dark chocolate almost biscuit-like base and a touch of spice provide palate substance. The oak mix of largely used French and American is gently layered into the pool of fruit adding further to an already engaging combination. Excellent wine.

2019 Wallace, 89 Points

Heady accents of dill and vanilla suggest a good measure of oak. The rich core of fruit threads throughout the sweet cloak of oak. This is a powerful and lofty expression of ripe red fruits. Its texture is chewy and a little raspy, and it finishes with a nice mix of rosehip, redcurrants and raspberry flavours.
